Market Commentary

Generali Money Market Syariah recorded a performance of 0.19% in January 2026. In January 2026, Indonesia's money market remains stable, with accommodative liquidity conditions continuing from the end of last year. Bank Indonesia's decision to maintain the BI-Rate at 4.75% continues to anchor short-term rates and support money-market stability, while system liquidity remains ample amid sustained foreign inflows and a more stable global monetary environment following the conclusion of the Fed's tightening cycle. With inflation well contained and interbank spreads remaining narrow, funding conditions remain supportive for carry and roll-down strategies, reinforcing a benign backdrop for domestic money market performance in the first quarter of 2026.
