Market Commentary

DPLK Generali Money Market Bravo recorded a performance of 0.37% in June 2026. The Indonesian money market in June 2026 was characterized by continued stabilization efforts. Bank Indonesia decided to hold its benchmark interest rate (BI-Rate) at the 5.75 percent level following the significant hike in the previous month, as the rupiah began to steady and move away from its historic lows to the range of Rp17,400 to Rp17,550 per US dollar. This move came in tandem with easing geopolitical tensions in the Middle East and a seasonal decline in corporate demand for US dollars. By maintaining the interest rate at a competitive level, Bank Indonesia successfully preserved the attractiveness of rupiah-denominated assets and curbed foreign capital outflows. Domestic banking liquidity remained healthy and balanced, continuously supported by monetary operations and the central bank's ongoing purchases of government securities. Although the transmission of last month's rate hike began to moderately lift interbank borrowing costs, money market activities continued to run dynamically and orderly. Bank Indonesia reaffirmed its commitment to prioritizing exchange rate stability while ensuring that money market liquidity remains supportive of domestic economic growth.
